Cupid—The son of Venus and the God of Love, who, with bow and arrows, punctured men's bosoms with the darts of admiration. But nowadays the arrow's not in it with a snug bathing suit or a decorative gown.

Daedalus—The original Santos Dumont, who invented and successfully operated a flying-machine that would fly. His son, Icarus, tried the trick, went too high and fell into the sea. A filer frequently precedes a fall—especially in Wall Street.

Cerebrus—A dog with three heads, a serpent's tail and several snakes around his neck, which guarded the main entrance to Hades.

When a man begins to see snakes and one head looks like three, it's a cinch he's not far from Hades.
